PREFACE.

It has seemed well to mark the centenary of the Lincolnshire Medical Benevolent Society by printing brief notice of the Anniversary Meetings, with their doings; a long record of strict adherence to rules carefully laid down and but rarely altered—never it would seem but for good cause shewn—and equally of quiet help given to the widows and children of members who had passed away.

More than this, the publication may well call attention to the care and the boldness with which Dr. Harrison* of Horncastle, the founder, urged upon his contemporaries the need for Medical Reform, and pointed out the imperative duty, incumbent on all members of the Medical Profession, to remember that they belong to a great Confraternity, with manifold obligations of tradition, of mutual help and of good service.

*Dr. Edward Harrison (1766—1838), of Horncastle, was M.D. Edin., F.R.A.S. Edin. and Member of the Royal Med. and Phys. Soc. of Edinburgh, and of Med. Soc., London, &c.

He was author of the following works:—

Letter to Dr. Stevenson, of Newark, on his Medical Cases,
&c. 8vo. Lond. 1782.

“De Opio Quædam.” 8vo. Edin. 1784.

(An Academical Thesis).

Inquiry into the Rot in Sheep and other animals.

8vo. Lond. 1804.

Remarks on the ineffective state of the Practice of Physic in Great Britain with proposals for its future regulation and improvement and the resolutions of the Members of the Benevolent Medical Society of Lincolnshire.

8vo. Lond. 1806.

An Address delivered to the Lincolnshire Benevolent Medical Society at their Anniversary Meeting in 1809.

8vo. Lond. 1810.

Remarks on the different appearances of the Back Breast and Ribs of persons affected with Spinal Diseases, &c.

8vo. Lond. 1820.

Pathological and Practical Observations on Spinal Diseases, an inquiry into the origin and cure of distorted limbs.

Lond. 1827.

The extraordinary case of Sarah Hawkes, one of extreme deformity cured by a method founded upon simple principles

8vo. Lond. 1832

A letter to Sir Benj. Brodie containing Observations and Strictures upon certain parts of his Lecture on Spinal Complaints.

12mo. Lond. 1835.

Certain changes were made in the rules. Then evidently matters of more general and far-reaching interest were taken into consideration, as the following minutes shew :

At a numerous and respectable meeting of the Lincolnshire medical practitioners, convened this day by public advertisement to take into consideration the necessity and expediency of a Medical Reform ; the following Resolutions and Address proposed by Dr. Harrison, the chairman, were unanimously adopted after a minute and careful discussion :

RESOLUTIONS :

1. It appears to this meeting that the principal Statutes and provisions relating to medical men of every denomination, settled out of the precincts of London, are rendered obsolete from never having been properly enforced since they were first enacted ; or have become wholly inapplicable to the present times, from the numerous changes which have taken place in the education and practice of medical men, as well as in the customs and manners of the people.

2. That the practice of Medicine in all its branches has of late years been rapidly declining in respectability, in usefulness and in emoluments, owing to the great number of Quacks dispersed through every part of the kingdom, and other causes likely to continue, so long as the profession remains upon its present defective establishment.

3. That upon the return of peace such additions will be made to the acting Faculty from the Army and Navy, that unless before that time more suitable arrangements are adopted, the whole profits of the profession will be altogether inadequate to the maintenance of its increased numbers.

4. That the condition of medical men has likewise suffered very much from some late Judicial determinations respecting the fees which have been claimed both by Physicians and Surgeons for their professional assistance.

5. Medicines of every kind are liable to so many adulterations in the hands of wholesale dealers and others, that numerous disappointments in practice can be traced entirely to these causes which it will be impossible to prevent until the drug trade be subjected to some new and better regulations.

6. It appears from authentic documents that the regular faculty do not constitute one-ninth of the practitioners now occupying physic for emolument in the county of Lincoln.

7. That besides the errors and unintentional injuries which are daily committed by ignorant Quacks upon their too credulous patients, there is great reason to fear that some of them acquire large sums of money and do irreparable injury to many pregnant women and their harmless offspring by trying to relieve the former from the natural consequences of their indiscreet and unauthorised familiarities.

8. That the grievances above enumerated are of sufficient magnitude to justify an application to the Legislature for a reform of the medical laws, and that the following resolutions constitute a part of it :

9. That every person now in practice who has served his apprenticeship or attended lectures in any respectable school of medicine be still suffered to retain his situation notwithstanding any future alteration in the medical constitution.

10. That in case any other practitioner should think himself qualified to occupy any department of medicine, he be required to apply to the magistrates at the Quarter Sessions of his own district, within twelve months from the commencement of the new regulations, who, on his submitting to an examination by three or more skilful medical practitioners, may grant him a licence provide he be by them thought to be duly qualified.

11. That after a limited period no other person should be allowed under severe penalties to exercise physic for emolument, until he shall have passed through a sufficient course of preparatory study and instructions.

12. That in the event of this improved alteration in the medical system taking place, it would be for the advantage of the public, and the increased respectability of the profession if every person were required to pay a suitable fine on receiving his certificate.

13. That nothing in this projected reform is intended to interfere with the sale of any nostrum or concealed medicines from which at this time Government receives any revenue ; although it is the unanimous sense of this meeting that it would be more for the advantage of the community to make a pecuniary acknowledgment in every future case to the discoverer of a new remedy or useful method of treating the sick, rather than reduce the ingenious to seek for their reward or suffer the artful to impose upon the unwary by Quackery or Empiricism.

14. That it would tend very much to ameliorate our poor laws, if an improvement of the present medical police constituted part of the system now in contemplation with the legislature ; as it would, in the event of sickness, be found not only an addition to the comforts of this important class of our fellow creatures ; but prevent great imposition, and consequent expense to parishes from improper persons obtaining relief and would rescue the objects themselves from the hands of uneducated practitioners, and in many instances protract their very valuable and useful lives to the public at large.

15. That the operation of the medical laws be no longer confined within the limits of the metropolis. Their influence ought to be equally felt in every part of the Kingdom, and as much as possible through the extended possessions of the British Empire.

ADDRESS.

It may not be improper nor uninteresting to the public in this early stage of our Medical Reform that we should more fully explain the leading objects of the present undertaking and particular views of those gentlemen who originally embarked in this bold and arduous scheme.

At the Anniversary of the Benevolent Medical Society held in September, 1804, the attending members were unanimously of opinion that the practice of Physic among Regulars had degenerated of late years through the County, and was, besides, so much engrossed by ignorant and unprincipled pretenders of various descriptions, that unless something could be specially adopted to raise the character of the healing art, it would e'er long be abandoned to persons of inferior learning and inadequate skill. In confirmation of this opinion they remarked that only a small number of their present Apprentices and Journeymen are of respectable parentage, or have acquired a suitable knowledge in the classics, and other branches of preparatory Learning. It was further observed that very few of their near relatives are intended for the medical profession, though if it held out equal inducements with other employments they would be inclined for many reasons to give it a decided preference. Actuated by these considerations the members agreed to constitute themselves into a Society, and to exert their best endeavours to restore a useful and honourable profession to its due rank among the various employments of mankind.

It was determined to commence the inquiry by circulating printed queries, with a view to ascertain the real state of the healing art in Lincolnshire, and from the answers which have been returned to them it is ascertained that the Regulars do not constitute one-ninth of the medical practitioners in this extensive and opulent county. Such a condition of things calls indeed loudly for reform, and the persons already engaged in the business are extremely solicitous to obtain an immediate and general co-operation among the Faculty of the United Kingdom in order that effectual measures may be adopted in the next session of Parliament to prevent further abuses by restraining Quacks and compelling all who are unadmitted to be sufficiently instructed before they presume to interfere with the health or lives of their fellow creatures.

Attempts have been made at different times to introduce a variety of alterations into the practice of medicine which have hitherto miscarried, chiefly perhaps because they were undertaken and conducted by particular descriptions of the Faculty without the knowledge and assistance of their brethren. It must be admitted that partial efforts and selfish combinations are more calculated to excite suspicion and awaken jealousy, than to produce a reform in which the interests and privileges of the different classes would be equally consulted and impartially maintained.

Whatever may be the imperfections of the present plan it is at least free from personal views and party considerations. The association was originally projected in a mixed company and has been uniformly supported by all ranks in the profession. Conscious, however, that the most laudable intentions are liable to be mistaken and misrepresented, the outlines of the scheme were submitted to some of the most eminent practitioners in Great Britain, to able lawyers, and to persons in high and commanding stations, before it was generally circulated in the County or became the subject of discussion at district meetings of the Faculty. After it had received the marked approbation of these respectable, disinterested and enlightened characters, a general meeting was called by advertisement to reconsider the proposals. They are now published to induce medical men in other parts of the Empire to unite for the common benefit of themselves, and what is of far greater national importance, the general advantage of their fellow creatures.

Certain restraints have been imposed upon authorized practitioners in London, in consequence of which the science and practice of medicine is better conducted in the metropolis than in the provinces, where it is well known that no enquiries are ever made into the education or professional acquirements of any practitioners. Each takes the title and fills the situation which is most suitable to his inclinations. From this unaccountable supineness or inattention there is great reason to believe that in Lincolnshire, persons have assumed the highest rank in physic who had never obtained a medical degree nor attended lectures in any University. Where the professional dignity and concomitant privileges of a physician are so easily acquired, it will not occasion much surprise if other persons should have intruded themselves into subordinate departments with slender and inadequate pretensions.

Since therefore a subject of so much importance to the community at large is not likely to originate in the Capital for the reasons already given, the Lincolnshire Faculty presume to believe that they shall not be thought to arrogate too much by venturing to recommend a Medical Reform to the serious attention of their brethren in general and as the approbation of several very eminent practitioners resident in London has already been obtained, they are persuaded to believe that this important measure will be powerfully supported in the Capital if the Provincial Faculty be zealously inclined to promote it.

The Associates are induced to propose, from a desire to accomplish their object as much as possible without injury or prejudice to anyone, that the restrictions shall fall entirely upon future practitioners. They are encouraged to believe that this proposal will be favourably received by the British Legislature, because when it was determined a few years since to impose new regulations and fresh burdens upon Attorneys and Solicitors, the admitted members were intentionally excepted ; and as the situations of both Faculties in these respects is nearly similar, it is presumed that Parliament will not on this occasion be induced to depart from an established and settled precedent.

Probably it will be found on enquiry that some able and successful practitioners lie concealed among the shoals of quacks who now infest the country, and fatten upon credulous and discontented invalids. It is therefore proposed that such shall continue to exercise their skill without any interruption, but to prevent further injury to the ignorant and undiscerning we recommend that none of them shall be suffered to continue unless they will submit to be examined and are found qualified to remain in the profession. The voluntary lenity towards quacks will, it is presumed, convince the public that, as Reformers, this Society is actuated by a desire to promote the interests of mankind in general rather than to serve any private intentions.

It ought to be stated in justice to the original promoters that only a few of them can expect at their age to derive much pecuniary advantage from any changes or improvements in the practice of physic. They consist chiefly of Practitioners who, having been several years established in their respective circuits, have arrived at their full measure of professional confidence and advancement. Nor can it be supposed imputable to vanity if such persons plead for some acquaintance with the corruptions in medicine or suggest what they think proper means for removing them.

Whether the whole or any part of the proposed scheme is fit to become the groundwork of a Medical Reform must be left to the opinion of others, and with that design the authors submit it as a preliminary step to the candid examination of their brethren in general. Whatever may be their determination, it is presumed that a due consideration of the various facts which have been brought to view in the foregoing resolutions cannot fail to impress every reader with the vast importance of the subject under consideration, and to excite in all men the utmost solicitude for a temperate and complete reform in the exercise of a profession, which, under able management, is eminently calculated not only to diminish many great and alarming evils but also to multiply the resources and increase the happiness of the British Empire.
